

ISLAMIC STUDIES

Our program in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies is growing and spans a wide range, from the ancient Near East to socio-political and religious developments in the 21st century. It covers a variety of topics related to societies and cultures in the Middle East and the Muslim world. The program is intentionally interdisciplinary and includes innovative research on the Quran, addresses the legal and philosophical dimensions of Islam, offers historical and sociological perspectives, and extends to topics such as digital humanities and secularism. We publish several book series and journals as well as a great variety of individual titles. All volumes are published in print and as e-book; select titles are also available in a paperback edition or open access.
