Notes

Tiberius Claudius Donatus wrote his "Interpretationes Virgilianeae" for his son, Tiberius Claudius Maximus, probably in the late-fourth century. In contrast to other extant commentaries, the "Interpretationes" do not focus on the explanation of grammatical or archaeological details, but attempt to give an aesthetic and rhetorical explanation of Virgil. Donatus analyses the poet's ideas, while following the outline of the story. The text that comes down to us has seven important gaps, within Books IV, VI, VII, VIII and XII. One of these gaps has been filled by Peter K. Marshall in 1993 when he published the hitherto unknown text of the commentary on verses 1 to 157 of Book VI (which he had just discovered in Vatican MS. Vat. lat. 8222). We have incorporated this text in the appropriate place.

The publication of this new text by Donatus has led a series of scholars to propose textual corrigenda. We may cite articles by S. J. Harrison et M. Winterbottom [in Classical Quarterly 45 (1995)], W. S. Watt [in Classical Quarterly 47 (1997) and Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 121 (1998)], R. Jakobi [in Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 116 (1997)], T. Gartner [in Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 118 (1997)] and H.-G. Nesselrath [also in Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 121 (1998)]. We have corrected the text published by Marshall only in those instances where substantial evidence supported a correction. Such cases are indicated with a double asterisk (). A single asterisk (*) has been employed to denote passages where various, divergent corrections have been proposed.

praecipa plus Aeneas: eadem causa etiam plus Aeneas dolebat, sed plus quam ceteri.

vol. 1, lib. 6, p. 532, lin. 9

ex superioribus appareb quid doluerint omnes; nam supra dixit de Aenea et Achate quod illius non solum mortem verum etiam genus loci doluissent.

vol. 1, lib. 6, p. 532, lin. 12

ut venere, inquit, vident indigna morte peremptum: indigna mors est quae non convenit viro fortis; nullus enim aut non talis existeret dolor, si in pugna cecidisset et campo.

vol. 1, lib. 6, p. 532, lin. 15

tum iussa Sibyllae, haut mora, festinant flentes: festinandum fuit, ut iussa Sibyllae mature et in omnibus conplerentur, scilicet ut curarentur funus et eius sollemnia.
