Objective

Folia Linguistica and Folia Linguistica Historica are the peer-reviewed journals of the Societas Linguistica Europaea (SLE). Each volume consists of two issues of Folia Linguistica, one issue of Folia Linguistica Historica, and one Special Issue. Folia Linguistica is devoted to empirically based linguistic topics and covers all non-historical areas in the traditional disciplines of general linguistics. The journal welcomes work from various theoretical perspectives, but contributions should be directed towards a general linguistic audience, in other words the argument should be understandable to linguists with other theoretical backgrounds. The domain of interest of Folia Linguistica includes sociological, discoursal, computational and psychological aspects of language and linguistic theory. Other areas of central concern are grammaticalization, language typology, and variation within and across languages. Folia Linguistica Historica is exclusively devoted to empirically based diachronic linguistics of all language families (including both historical and comparative linguistics).

Topics

Folia Linguistica

- non-historical areas in general linguistics
- grammaticalization
- language typology
- language variation
- language varieties
- sociological, discoursal, computational and psychological aspects of language and linguistic theory

Folia Linguistica Historica

- diachronic linguistics (including both historical and comparative linguistics)
- linguistic reconstruction (both internal and external) and language phylogeny
- computational approaches to linguistic variation and change
