

Appendix. Suggested Reading

There has been more and better writing about Argentina than about any other Latin American country, with the possible exception of Mexico, if we consider writings in both English and Spanish on all the principal aspects of the nation's life — political, social, cultural, economic, military, diplomatic — both past and present. The reader who wishes to follow up almost any topic discussed in this volume is therefore likely to find the literature abundant, though for the Perón period much of it is widely scattered and strongly biased. Since he will need to know both languages if he is to get the best that is available, works in Spanish as well as English are included in the following suggestions. It need hardly be added that these give only a sampling of the very extensive literature of the subject.

I. LAND AND PEOPLE

There is an excellent 90-page chapter on the human geography of Argentina, with maps and illustrations, in Preston E. James, Latin America (2nd ed.; New York, 1950). The most comprehensive economic study, now out of date in some respects but still valuable, is A. E. Bunge, La economía argentina (Buenos Aires, 1928-1930; 4 vols.). Much briefer but more up-to-date is Carlos Moyano Llerena, Argentina social y económica (Buenos Aires, 1950). On the most important region in recent times, the pampas, there are two excellent studies: Mark Jefferson, Peopling the Argentina Pampa (New York, 1926), and Carl C. Taylor, Rural Life in Argentina (Baton Rouge, 1948), the latter of which covers not only the pampas but the rest of Argentina as well and is one of the best books in English on that country. Statistics on population, natality, and mortality, at various periods from 1900 to 1943, are brought together, with maps and charts, in Argentina, Summary of Biostatistics, prepared by the United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, in coöperation with the Office of the Coördinator of Inter-American Affairs
