European Alternatives:
Daphne Büllesbach,
Marta Cillero,
Lukas Stolz (eds.)

SHIFTING BASILINES OF EUROPE

New Perspectives beyond Neoliberalism and Nationalism
This book opens the often narrow discourse on the future of Europe and criticises the false dichotomy between nationalism on the one hand and a neoliberal version of Europe on the other. Existing emancipatory projects from across the continent are presented together with reflections on strategies to achieve a democratic Europe beyond the nation state: from the municipal level to the level of transnational media, from technology and counter-surveillance to the systemic change provided by the commons movement and more. The shift towards a new way of thinking and doing politics is possible!

"Anyone interested in survival in today's Europe, should read this book."
– Srecko Horvat, Philosopher, DIEM25

"The ideas and projects presented in this book are exactly what the debate on Europe needs right now."
– Saskia Sassen, Professor of Sociology, Columbia University

European Alternatives works to promote democracy, equality and culture beyond the nation states. With offices in four European countries and a network of activists and local groups stretching to over fourteen, the organisation is unique in being at once a breeding ground for new ideas and proposals for politics and culture at a European level and in being a political and cultural actor with a truly transeuropean activity, staff and support base.

Daphne Büllesbach is Managing Director of European Alternatives and curator of Transeuropa Festival, a bi-annual cultural, political and arts event. She holds degrees in Political and Social Sciences from London, Paris and Cambridge.

Marta Cillero is responsible for Communications at European Alternatives. She studied media studies, journalism and communication in Madrid, Istanbul and Chicago, and has a background in gender studies.

Lukas Stolz is special projects collaborator at European Alternatives and previously worked as a campaigner with Democracy International. His research interest lies in the intersection between politics, cultural theory and art and he holds a degree in Philosophy, Politics and Economics from the University of Witten/Herdecke.

For further information:
www.transcript-verlag.de/978-3-8376-3954-4

© 2017 transcript Verlag, Bielefeld
Contents

Note from the editors | 9

INTRODUCTION

Shifting the baselines
Daphne Büllesbach | 15

Our European incapacity
Etienne Balibar | 18

Our European capacity
Which Europe do we want? Rediscovering Hannah Arendt’s concept of integral federalism
Ulrike Guérot | 26

SHIFTING CITIES

Introduction | 35

The magnet and the container
A transnational space of expression for “Cities of change” through Europe
Giuseppe Caccia | 37
The cities want them in
For a revised common European refugee policy to revive the European Union
Gesine Schwan | 42

Rebel cities are not utopia
Interview with Luigi de Magistris, Mayor of Naples | 45

Institutions mean inertia
Interview with Laia Forné, Barcelona en Comú | 49

Moment of confluence on the Atlantic coast
Interview with Claudia Delso, Marea Atlántica | 57

This is how you win an election
Stacco Troncoso in conversation with Victoria Anderica, head of Transparency, and Miguel Arana, director of Citizen Participation, City of Madrid | 62

Forerunners of Italian municipalism
Interview with Renato Accorinti, Mayor of Messina | 70

Don't let them d(r)own
Interview with Dobrica Veselnovic and Ksenija Radovanović, Ne da(v)i mo Beograd | 74

Cities rejecting surveillance
Renata Avila | 78

SHIIFTING MEDIA

Introduction | 85

The populist Challenge 2.0
How populism profits from social media
Jan Rohgalf | 87
Contesting the shrinking media space in Slovakia
Alena Krempaska and Peter Weisenbacher | 97

Fluid media landscapes
Adam Ramsay | 101

Networked protest for a populist age
Jakub Dymek | 105

Journalism in spite of everything
Interview with Esther Alonso, eldiario.es | 109

We are the newcomers
Interview with Ramy Al-Asheq, Abwab | 113

Our digitally mediated society
Robin Mansell | 119

SHIFTING ALLIANCES

Introduction | 131

A rigged economy in a rigged democracy
Lorenzo Marsili | 133

Breaking with the rules that ruin the Union
Lorenzo Marsili in conversation with Barbara Spinelli | 141

Social networks of influence in Europe – and beyond
Dieter Plehwe | 147

Learning from Syriza
Andreas Karitzis | 158

The commons as unifying political vision
Sophie Bloemen | 167
Instructions for building a pan-European movement
Interview with Pia Eberhardt, Corporate Europe Observatory | 174

Together means Razem
Interview with Marcelina Zawisza and Maciej Konieczny, Razem | 180

The birth of a new civic platform in Romania
Interview with Oana Băluță and Camil Pârvu, Demos | 185

The Rojava Revolution and the model of democracy without a state
Sheruan Hassan and Jonas Staal | 189

Works by Democratic Self-Administration of Rojava and Studio Jonas Staal
New World Summit Rojava (2015-2017) | 193

A revolution of life
Jonas Staal in conversation with Salih Muslim | 200

ANNEX

List of organisations in order of appearance | 207

List of contributors | 210
Shifting the baselines

Daphne Büllsbach

If you know European Alternatives, you will know what is important to us is to engage and inspire people to act. Having launched just over ten years ago, our aim has been, from the start, to contribute to the writing of the next chapter of European integration. A chapter that looks significantly different to the status quo and that can only be written by all those citizens who feel trapped in the neoliberal dogma of today’s European Union and whose voices too often go unheard. Our politics are based on the fact that it has become impossible to do progressive politics in only one country or only on a national basis, hence our motto of democracy, equality and culture beyond the nation state. We need a transnationally engaged civil society that understands itself as such and acts as such in itself and for itself. The wind is blowing ever stronger for those that do not want to give up the European project and retreat to nationalism, protectionism, walls and fences. But if we are unable to make a hegemonic shift in the direction of a progressive internationalism, we are not talking about the end of free movement, but the end of the European project itself.

We need to act now against the rise of authoritarianism in the guise of right wing populists. We need to act against the nationalism that threatens to destroy what we, the generations that have grown up with the fall of the Berlin wall, have taken for granted: freedom of movement for all people and, indeed, not only of us privileged European passport holders. And yet again, mere opposition is not enough, we cannot only engage in a politics of defense that is incapable of articulating something new, incapable of articulating the world we want to see.

For effective cooperation and transnational movement building, there is a need for better analysis and background on the context and realities in which actors operate. These are still very different across Europe and across political fields, and often rooted in national or regional contexts. But while we also do have transnational spaces and many live transnational lives, little do we yet challenge power effectively on a transnational level (of those that do, we show examples in this book, including the anti-TTIP campaign).

Electoral democracy is in a state of disrepair. Centre-left political parties have been hollowed out, social democracy has completed the shift towards market fundamentalism, leaving a potential vacuum. The banking crisis has brought no consequences and no government has stood up against the financial corporations. Movements for a fairer society and a fairer economy flourish briefly, such as Occupy, Nuit Debout or the Refugees Welcome movement, that existed in the summer of 2015 across Europe. They shoot to international attention and capture people’s imagination, yet little seems left of them a few months after. There is an increasing realisation that we need to shelve the pure horizontality of the movements of the squares as it fails to effectively challenge the centres of power.

It is often the city, the space of social and cultural condensation, that provides the breeding ground for new ideas and formations, where many of these movements have started from. In Spain we have seen major cities being taken over by platforms emerging from the square occupations. Putting the citizen back into politics was the recipe to their success: what answers to the crisis of representation can we take from there? After just two years in power the civic platform government of Madrid has interesting perspectives to give on the question of whether their victory and the seizure of the institution has led to a politicisation of public life and whether they are able to go beyond the symbolism of that victory. This debate opens up the old question of whether the left should seize power or whether an institutionalised left is only busy negotiating the notorious contradictions between the ‘inside’ and the ‘outside’ of government.

As the proclamation of the ‘post-factual era’ has made us aware again, the power of emotions and the need for inspiration are key to counteracting the rise of nationalism and the narrative of austerity and neoliberalism.

---

1 | Meanwhile it is arguable that without Occupy, we might not have had Bernie Sanders or without the Refugees Welcome movement, we might not have had Merkel’s welcome policy.
This book contributes to offering a vision and feeling of how alternatives could look like by creating visibility for such initiatives and narratives: from the municipal level to the level of transnational media, to how we work with technology and counter-surveillance, to a concrete proposal to revive the European refugee policy and the fundamental change of making society provided by the commons movement. Our motivation is to give people the desire to engage politically for an open, equal and democratic society.

The book is divided into three chapters that are each introduced in more depth separately. The following two texts are part of the introduction of this book as they set the tone, allowing us to understand the urgency in which we find ourselves in: a contribution by Etienne Balibar from 2011 and an answer today by Ulrike Guérot. They tackle the fundamental crisis underlying the European integration process, the missed opportunity to become a Union of Citizens by giving up on national sovereignty. Guérot suggests the path shown by Hannah Arendt’s concept of integrated federalism could save the Union from disappearing into petty nationalisms. The mayor of Barcelona, Ada Colau, put it differently recently when she evoked the shifting baselines we are talking about here: “People call me a radical, but what is radical? We are living in strange times when defending democracy and human rights has become radical.” It is up to us to not let this be the narrative of our time and define ourselves what is radical today.