

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I am deeply grateful to my colleagues at Centre Minkowska. My gratitude goes to Rachid Bennegadi, Marie-Jo Bourdin, and Christophe Paris for taking a chance on hiring an anthropologist and for defending the relevance of my presence inside the clinic. This book builds on the engaged and generous work of my colleagues at the center: Maria Vittoria Carlin, Smail Cheref, Audrey Gittinger, Christine Pinto Lenoir, Verthança Mavanga, Daria Rostirolla, and Laetitia Virgal. Through this book, I want to pay tribute to all of them.

As this is only one part of the center's team, I would also like to acknowledge the contributions of the remainder of Centre Minkowska's staff: Soraya Ayouch, Nader Barzin, Jenny Voltaire, Mika Delpierre, Maurice Dores, Maja Guberina, Afrodita Hodza, Christophe Huby, Kouakou Kouassi, Can Liem Luong, Georges Meliz, Maruca Mendieta, Benan Penpe-Ozer, Doudou Sarr, and Ines De Paula Vasques.

I also want to pay tribute to the patients and the professional interpreters I have been fortunate to work with at the center. Practicing in a transcultural context with people who come from a variety of cultures and life experiences is both incredibly enriching and humbling.

This professional and intellectual venture germinated almost two decades ago, when I arrived at Southern Methodist University in Dallas to start a graduate program in anthropology. I had freshly graduated from the MAPPS program at the University of Chicago, and I was interested in transnationalism and identity transformation in the context of migration. I knew little about medical anthropology, and I did not anticipate working on migration-related health issues. As these things often do, this new orientation in my life began with an encounter. Medical anthropologist Carolyn Sargent has been a true mentor and friend, and she offered me this wonderful opportunity of doing fieldwork at home while studying abroad. Through the years, Carolyn has continued offering me professional support and advice, and I am extremely grateful to her for that as well. At SMU, I benefited from the great mentorship of Carolyn Smith-Morris and Caroline Brettell. Two other SMU scholars who have since passed away also had an influence on my training: Victoria Lockwood and Robert Van Kemper.

While in France, Carolyn introduced me to anthropology and sociology colleagues at CRESP (Centre de recherche sur la santé, le social et le politique): a research center on health, society, and politics, which was created by Didier Fassin. This opened up another opportunity for me—that of completing a joint degree at EHESS (Ecole des hautes études en sciences sociales) in Paris under Didier Fassin's supervision. It was a chance for me to benefit from the close supervision
