

Acknowledgments

I wish to thank those who have read this book in whole or in part: Ronald Dworkin, Robert W. Gordon, Nicola Lacey, and Neil MacCormick, all of whom helped me by pointing out egregious errors, dubious arguments, and various inanities and infelicities, by suggesting fruitful lines of inquiry, and by providing in their own work fine models of scholarship. Despite their assistance, it should not be assumed that any of these kind individuals agrees with the contents of this book. For the imperfections and errors that remain, I take sole responsibility. As W.H. Auden versified about Oxford in 1937, the university and its denizens ‘challenge our high-strung students with a careless beauty / Setting a single error / Against their countless faults.’

During the period of this book’s preparation, I have also been deeply grateful for the intellectual camaraderie and unstinting support of colleagues closer to home, among whom I single out especially Donna Greschner, David Schneiderman, and Bruce Ziff. I am indebted to Virgil Duff of the University of Toronto Press for his admirable patience. The referees who read the manuscript for that press also made numerous helpful suggestions.

Many of the themes of this book were initially worked out and appeared – in embryonic form – in an article contained in volume 33 (1989) of the McGill Law Journal. For permission to reprint that material here in revised form as Chapter 5, my thanks are due.
