

The Contributors

Hilliard Aronovitch is an Associate Professor, and former Chair, of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Ottawa. He specializes in ethics, social-political theory, and philosophy of law. His current research focuses on foundations of democracy and questions of political culture. He has published articles in scholarly journals and volumes in Canada, the U.S., and Europe, including: From communitarianism to republicanism: on Sandel and his critics. Canadian Journal of Philosophy (forthcoming); Nationalism in theory and reality. Philosophy of the Social Sciences (September, 2000); Why secession is unlike divorce. Public Affairs Quarterly (2000); A liberal reading of the American Constitution. Canadian Journal of Law and Jurisprudence (1997); The political importance of analogical argument. Political Studies (1997); Reflective equilibrium or evolving tradition? Inquiry (1996). He can be reached at haron@uottawa.ca.

Ellen Balka is an Associate Professor in Simon Fraser University's School of Communication, and the Director of the Assessment of Technology in Context Design Lab (ATIC-DL), at SFU. She has been doing research about women's use of and access to computer networks since 1986. In addition to several articles, she has written one book and edited another about women's use of computers. Currently she is doing research about health information technology and women's work, and the global movement of women's work made possible through telecommunications technology.

G. Dean Barry is currently a Ph.D. candidate in Sociology at the University of British Columbia. His principal area of study concerns new information technology, risk and governance. The title of his dissertation is Risk and Responsibility: The Politics of Positive Identification in Neo-Liberal Welfare Reform. His most recent work is an article in Economy and Society (November 2000), co-authored with Richard V. Ericson and Aaron Doyle, titled "The Moral Hazard of Neo-Liberalism: Lessons from the Private Insurance Industry." He can be reached at barry@interchange.ubc.ca.

Jon Bekken is Assistant Professor of Communication and Journalism at Suffolk University, Boston. He has published several articles on the political economy of the retail book industry and on the history of newsboys and the labor press.

William F. Birdsall is Executive Director of Novanet, a consortium of Nova Scotia academic libraries. He has published articles on the politics of librarianship, professionalism, information technology, telecommunications, and public policy. His book, The Myth of the Electronic Library (1994), was published in Japan in 1996. He recently co-edited with Karen Adams, Understanding Telecommunication and Public Policy: a Guide for Libraries (Canadian Library Association, 1998). He can be reached at bill.birdsall@novanet.ns.ca.

Paula Chakravarty is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Communication at the University of California, San Diego. She is currently in the process of preparing a book manuscript based on her research on the history and politics of competing vision of "high-tech" development in India. She can be reached at pchakrav@ucsd.edu.

Leonie Daws has recently retired from her position as Director of the Centre for Policy and Leadership Studies, Faculty of Education, Queensland University of Technology. She has lectured in the fields of curriculum studies and educational policy over the past 24 years in Queensland, Victoria and New South Wales. She has conducted research projects in the areas of women in management, gender issues in curriculum policy and practice, and rural women's use of communication technologies for networking and information access.

Leen d'Haenens is Associate Professor at the Department of Communication, University of Nijmegen, the Netherlands, where she teaches European Media Policy, International Communication, and Media, Minorities and Prejudice. She recently co-edited Media Dynamics and Regulatory Concerns in the Digital Age (Berlin, Quintessenz, 1998). She also edited Cyberidentities: Canadian and European Presence in Cyberspace (Ottawa University Press, 1999). She can be reached at l.dhaenens@maw.kun.nl.

Juris Dilevko is an Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Information Studies at the University of Toronto. He has published a number of articles in library and information science journals about various aspects of librarianship. He can be reached at dilevko@fis.utoronto.ca.

Martin R. Dowding is a former journalist, indexer, and academic librarian. He was the book review, library, and managing editor at Quill & Quire magazine (1985-1990) and has held positions in the libraries of the University of Toronto and Saint Mary's University in Halifax. Recently he has been an Adjunct faculty member at the Faculty of Information Studies at the University of Toronto, where he is completing his doctoral dissertation on national information infrastructure policy-making in the U.S. and Canada. He can be reached at dowding@fis.utoronto.ca.