The scientific journal Fatigue of Aircraft Structures is issued once a year by the Scientific Publications Department of the Institute of Aviation.

The publishing costs are paid by the Scientific Publications Department of the Institute of Aviation. Additional funding can be obtained from the Ministry of Education or other means.

The range of topics covers all aspects of aeronautical fatigue and structural integrity.

Manuscripts should be submitted in the electronic format (*.docx or *.doc) in compliance with the Instructions to Authors available on the Journal’s website.

Manuscripts should be written in English.

The Editor-in-Chief reviews the manuscript for compliance with the thematic scope of the Journal and then passes it for review by Reviewers with expertise in the given discipline. In justifiable cases the Editor-in-Chief may delegate these powers to a Thematic Editor of the Journal with expertise in the given field.

The Editor-in-Chief has to verify whether Authors have followed recommendations in the reviews. In justifiable cases the Editor-in-Chief may delegate these powers to a Thematic Editor or a member of the Editorial Advisory Board of the Journal with expertise in the given field.

A positive review is a pre-requisite for publishing the manuscript. A Review Form is available on the Journal’s website. Reviews are made by two independent Reviewers affiliated with an organisation other than that of the Author’s and at least one is affiliated with an institution in a country other than that related to the nationality of Authors. Authors do not know the identity of Reviewers.

It is a condition of publication in the journal that Authors send a hand-signed statement of holding full copyright to texts, tables and graphics in the manuscript sent for publication. The Authors should agree that the non-commercial use of the article will be governed by a Creative Commons License. A License to Publish Form is available on the Journal’s website.
10. Only a person who contributed significantly to the creation of the manuscript (substantive contribution) can be recognised as Author. The name and affiliation of Authors should be placed in the heading section of the article. In the case of a contribution in kind, financial etc., the name of the contributor should be listed in the acknowledgements. It is absolutely unacceptable to name as Author a person who did not contribute to the article or whose contribution was insignificant.

11. When submitting a manuscript for publication it is obligatory to provide written information on scope of contributions from individual Authors, sources of funding as well as support of research institutions, associations and other entities. An Information Form is available on the Journal’s website.

12. Any scientific misconduct, in particular falsification of research or research outcomes or any other form of scientific fraud including breaching copyright law or related rights will be exposed and relevant institutions will be notified of the fact.

13. The final decision on publishing the article belongs to Editor-in-Chief.
