Dear Book Reviewer:

Thank you very much for contributing to the Journal of the Bible and Its Reception. Keeping scholars apprised of new works in the field of biblical reception history is an important aspect of our mission. We appreciate your willingness to share your time and expertise. Please be so kind as to observe the following guidelines when writing your review:

- Include a brief but balanced summary of the book’s scope, purpose, and content. Place the book within the context of current scholarly discussions. Avoid excessive detail and do not list the authors and/or articles within an edited volume. Please also indicate the intended audience and whether the book successfully addresses that audience.

- All reviews must have evaluative content concerning the primary strengths and weaknesses of the work. Your assessment might include the author’s expertise, quality of evidence and argument, relation to other works, or significance to the field. Brevity requires focus on features of the book that most require evaluation. You are not expected to comment on every essay in an edited volume.

- Keep in mind the interdisciplinary nature of JBR and its readers. Do not use unnecessary technical jargon, and please explain obscure disciplinary concepts.

- Avoid pejorative or overtly confessional terminology and potentially libelous language. Use gender-inclusive language.

- Whether the review is favorable or unfavorable, reviewers should express criticism in courteous and constructive terms, treating authors with professionalism and respect.

- Reviews will be edited for style and content. Reviewers have the right to accept or reject all editorial changes, although the journal maintains the right to refuse submissions that are deemed inappropriate for the journal.

- Unless otherwise agreed, reviews must be submitted to the soliciting editor within two months of receipt of the book. Please limit reviews to a strict maximum of 1,500 words.

- Reviews should be submitted as a double-spaced Word document with generous margins of 1-1.5 inches. Use a single space at the end of sentences.
• No page references to the book under review should be used unless it is a direct citation.
• At the top of your review, the header should read as follows:

  TITLE OF BOOK: subtitle. By Jane B. Smith. Title of Series, Number of Volume in Series. Place(s) of Publication: Publisher, Date of Publication. Pp. Roman + Arabic; Hardcover Price/Paperback price/eBook price.

• The reviewer's name and either their primary professional affiliation or place of residence must be included in italics at the end of the review. Please keep this information minimal.
• For all other questions of format or style, please see the general JBR Style Guidelines.
