THE MACHINE HAS A SOUL began as my dissertation at Georgetown University. Michael Kazin, my advisor, is a perfect combination of sharpness and cool. His sharpness led to second and third drafts. His cool reassured me it was all doable. I hope some of his sharpness rubbed off on me. I am sure as hell his cool never will.

I wrote much of this book in Europe. At the Free University of Brussels, Pieter Lagrou and Kenneth Bertrams gave me institutional support and a network of peers. The Roosevelt Institute for American Studies (RIAS) in Middelburg welcomed me to their PhD scholars’ seminar in the spring of 2016. At the RIAS, Dario Fazzi is a true friend. In Amsterdam, George Blaustein challenged me to present the unexpected—he always will. In Rome, Stefania Cianflone Mottola and Cristiano Carocci gave me a place, and people, to call home. From afar, Katie Benton-Cohen inspired me with her wit and warmth. Rick Bell has done his job, and then some, through the Institute for Humane Studies’ mentorship program.

I am grateful to all the organizations that gave me support (and timely boosts to morale): the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at Georgetown University; the Cosmos Club Foundation of Washington, DC; the Roosevelt Institute; the Academia Belgica; and the Belgian Historical Institute of Rome. Archivists at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library in Hyde Park, New York, and the Central State Archives in Rome made my research visits much more productive. Signor Mancini—a retired gentleman who catalogued many of the Ministry of Popular Culture files—pointed me to a trove of materials at the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Rome.

The Institute for Humane Studies at George Mason University enabled the reproduction of many of the illustrations that appear in this book. Edward Cesare helped me to trace the wonderful illustrations by his grandfather, Oscar Edward Cesare, for the New York Times. Thank you, Edward and your family, for your openness to this project.
At Princeton University Press, Jeremi Suri and Sven Beckert expressed enthusiasm for this book from the get-go. The anonymous readers who took on my manuscript gave me immensely helpful advice. Eric Crahan and Thalia Leaf are responsive, professional, and wise. Nathan Carr and Jennifer Harris helped me to turn a manuscript into a book. I cannot thank you all enough for your belief and your support.

Leo Ribuffo died in November 2018. He had a formal role in the production of this book, since he served on my dissertation committee. He was also my best teacher. Leo was so very human—prickly, generous, and hilarious. I am one, of many, who feels the loss.

For many years, Sophie thought, “Mummy does yoga.” That is because her presence encouraged me to shut down the computer at 6 pm. When Hugh came along, my motivation doubled. Thank you, Sophie and Hugh, for keeping me motivated. And thank you, Jason, for holding us all together.
