Acknowledgments

Earlier versions of chapters 3 through 5 have been published before; the versions printed here all include significant revisions and/or additions. I am grateful to the following publishers for permission to reprint earlier material: Cambridge University Press (for chapter 3, formerly “Music and Representation: The Instance of Haydn’s Creation” in Music and Text: Critical Inquiries, ed. Steven Paul Scher, 1992, and for chapter 5, formerly “Felix Culpa: Goethe and the Image of Mendelssohn” in Mendelssohn Studies, ed. R. Larry Todd, 1993), and Indiana Theory Review (for chapter 4, Spring and Fall 1992). A small portion of chapter 1, also in an earlier version, appeared in my article “The Musicology of the Future” in Repercussions (Spring 1992).

Previous publication aside, a good deal of the work presented here originated in lectures given at various colleges, universities, conferences, and meetings of professional societies. I owe a great debt to the audiences at these events, whose comments and criticisms are reflected beyond my capacity to enumerate them. My particular thanks, however, go to my colleagues Karol Berger, Robert Fink, Walter Frisch, Richard Littlefield, Susan McClary, Steven Paul Scher, Richard Taruskin, and R. Larry Todd, and to Doris Kretschmer, humanities editor at the University of California Press. Thanks, also, to my editors Erika Büky and David Severtson for their scrupulous work.

Personal acknowledgments, while customary in this space, are never truly adequate. In this volume I hope the dedication will speak for itself.
