ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The research for this book was originally carried out when I was enrolled as a graduate student at the University of California at Berkeley between 1988 and 1990. It was a great privilege to attend one of this nation's best public institutions. I will forever value the tremendous support I received from the university, the professionalism and intellectual rigor of its faculty, and the profound impact made upon me by my fellow students.

This book would not have been possible without the financial support of a number of benefactors. My research in Berlin, Aachen, and Marbach was supported by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada and the German Academic Exchange Program. I wish to thank the efficient and courteous staff at the German Literature Archive in Marbach, in particular Brigitte van Helt for her assistance with the photographs for this book. I am also grateful to James Kettner and the Berkeley history department for a grant in 1991 to write the dissertation.

My deepest intellectual debt goes out to my teacher and friend Martin Jay. He read the manuscript several times and offered his acute insights as well as his famous long lists of books for further reading. I had the unbelievable luck to learn intellectual history from the finest practitioner of the craft in academia. My other history teachers were no less inspiring, Ed Hundert, Gene Brucker, William Bouwsma, Gerald Feldman, and Martin Malia.

I am grateful to the following friends, colleagues and professionals who read all or parts of the manuscript. They generously offered their time and wisdom: Franziska Augstein, Albrecht Betz, Carolyn Brown, Warren Breckman, Marcus Bullock, Pam Burdman, Mathias Eidenbenz, Hajo Funke, Jeffrey Herf, Richard Herzinger, Bruce Johnson, Lewis Klaussner, Ben Lapp, Rich Krivcher, Eduardo Mendieta, Armin Mohler, Dirk Moses, Anson Rabinbach, Carola Schulz, and Lars Tragardh. I would also like to thank the following persons for intellectual and spiritual sustenance along the long road to completing what turned out to be a ten-year project: Jeff Baile, Lüdger Bült, Ben Binstock, Alon Confino, Susan Crane, Goran Dahl, Ross Dickenson, Gudrun Egloff, Christoph Egloff, Jeffrey Friedman, John Ely, Peter Fritzsch, Richard Golsan, Markus Hattstein, Peter Hoffenburg, Gerd Horten, Bob Holub, Renate Holub, Jon Hanfin, Dane Johnson, Anton Kaes, Randy Kaufmann, Gordon Kopelow, Akiba Lerner, Michael Lerner, Tom Lucas, Andy Markovits, Cassian Markworth, Sigi Müller, Tom Noll, Heath Pearson, Henri Plard, Horst Severens, Erhard Stölting, Dirk von Laak, Jeff Verhey, Michael Werz, Richard Wolin, and Jonathan Zatlin.

The University of San Francisco, my home institution, has provided me with a stimulating environment to teach and write since my arrival in 1993. I value highly the warm and collegial atmosphere of the university and would like to extend my appreciation to the administration, Stanley Nel, John Pinelli, Gerardo Marin, Jennifer Turpin, and Nancy Compagna, as well as to my wonderful colleagues in the history department, Cornelius M. Buckley, Martin Claussen, Cheryl Czekala, Tony Fels, Elisabeth Gleason, Andy Heinze, Uldis Kruze, Kathy Nasstrom, Paul Murphy, Julio Moreno, Mike Stanfield, and Vicky Siu.

My thanks to the editors at the University of California Press, who navigated this book around all obstacles with dexterity and dedication, Ed Dimendberg, Laura Pasquale, Julie Brand, and Sabine Seiler.

Finally I want to thank my family for affection and support. My German wife, Barbara, only occasionally tired of hearing stories about old fascists. My brother Noah, with his genial humor and funny imitations, always made me laugh, no matter how bad my mood. My mother, Leah Neaman, was a source of unfailing inspiration, love, and encouragement. Finally, this book is dedicated to my maternal grandfather, who I wish had lived long enough to see me live up to some of the high ideals he held dear and passed on to his children and grandchildren.
