Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the contribution of many institutions and individuals. It brings together a number of the papers originally presented at a conference in Rio de Janeiro in 1996, organized by the Program on Gender, Sexuality, and Health at the Center for Research and Study in Collective Health (CEPESC) of the Institute of Social Medicine (IMS), State University of Rio de Janeiro (UERJ), with support provided by the Ford Foundation and the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation.

For their help in preparing the manuscript, we would particularly like to thank Ana Paula Uziel, Juan Carlos de la Concepción Raxach, Vagner de Almeida, and Rita Rizzo at the Institute of Social Medicine; Charles Klein, Delia Easton, and Chris White at the HIV Center for Clinical and Behavioral Studies, New York State Psychiatric Institute and Columbia University; and Helen Thomas and Paula Hassett at the Thomas Coram Research Unit, Institute of Education, University of London.

The final manuscript has also benefitted greatly from suggestions by the three outside reviewers who commented for the University of California Press: Margaret Connors, Jonathan Mann, and Steve Epstein. Those suggestions were crucial in revising and rethinking the volume.

We particularly wish to dedicate the book to Jonathan Mann, whose tragic death occurred as we were finalizing our work. Jonathan was both friend and mentor to many of the editors and contributors. As most readers will know, he was tireless in his work against the HIV/AIDS pandemic and for health and human rights. What many may not know is that he was also fundamentally committed to research on sexuality and sexual health. His work as founding director of the World Health Organization’s Global Programme on AIDS had convinced him that one of the greatest barriers to responding to the HIV/AIDS epidemic globally was the remarkable silence, stigma, and discrimination so often associated with issues related to gender and sexuality around the world. When he left WHO and moved to Harvard University to found the François-Xavier Bagnoud Center for Health and Human Rights, he worked with Richard Parker to create an international working group on sexuality research that is in many ways the direct precursor to the project leading to the current volume and involved many of its contributors—and he continued to support and defend sex research until his untimely death. His was, as Rosalind Petchesky, one of the contributors to this volume, put it, “a vital and powerful voice for what we are all working for.” He will be sorely missed.
