Collaborative relationships made this book possible. It has been a joy for me to feel part of an emerging sound studies community as embodied by something like the Sounding Out blog. My thanks go to Jennifer Stoever for asking me to contribute to the blog, where a section of chapter 4 appeared under the title, “Devil’s Symphony: Orson Welles’s ‘Hell on Ice’ as Eco-Sonic Critique.” Neil Verma read a draft of that material and helped me to sharpen the prose and clarify the argument.

_Eco-Sonic Media_ relies on historical research and so has involved collaboration with many people at archives, libraries, and a range of other institutions. I wish to thank Karen Fishman at the Library of Congress; Laura LaPlaca, Robert Wild, Linda Hogan, Phil Scepanski, Sascha Förster, Jochen Klähn, Hans-Gunter Scharf, Ramani Ranganathan and the staff at the Indian Institute of Natural Resins and Gums in Ranchi; Gauri Nori and Chris Higgins at Annapurna Studios in Hyderabad; Robert Shuster at the Billy Graham Center; Laura Kissel at the Byrd Polar Research Center Archive at Ohio State University; and Ron Shore at Windy City Detectors. The University of California Press continues to make the publication process pleasant and efficient. Bradley Depew was extremely conscientious and helpful as I compiled the manuscript. I am very grateful to Tang Yau Hoong for allowing me to use his remarkable image Songbird on the cover of the book. Thanks are due as well to the designers at the press.

Colleagues and friends have provided much inspiration and encouragement, among them Frauke Behrendt, Nadia Bozak, Lisa Parks, Jonathan Sterne, Robert Ray, Dale Lawrence, Greg Waller, Haidee Wasson, Charles Acland, Barbara Klinger, and James Naremore. David Haberman planted the seeds of eco-awareness in my mind and has long been a role model for what an environmentally engaged scholarship might look like. I owe a special thanks to Patrick Feaster for his continued friendship, support, and invaluable advice. At Northwestern, I wish to thank Barbara O’Keefe, Heather Trulock, Michelle Yamada, Shatoria Lunsford, Laura Brueck, Bryan Pardo, Nina Kraus, Tracy Davis, David Tolchinsky, Debra Tolchinsky, Bill Bleich, Jeff Sconce, Hamid Naficy, Ariel Rogers, Miriam Petty, Scott Curtis, Lynn Spigel, Mimi White, and Neil Verma.

As with all of my work, this book would not have been possible without the love and support of my family, especially Freda, Jonah, Henry, and Bing.

The most significant collaborator in the life of this book, however, was Mary Francis. More than simply editing a manuscript, she saved the project from several false starts and dead ends and steered it with great agility toward its present form. I am enormously indebted to her patience, faith, and sonic imagination.
