A work of scholarship, particularly when it is a collaborative venture such as this volume, results from the efforts of many people and organizations. Among those who have been instrumental in making this volume a reality is Suzanne Rancourt, the Manager of Humanities Acquisitions at the University of Toronto Press. Anyone who has worked with her knows her rare and admirable administrative abilities. My thanks also to her team that has produced this book so expertly, especially to Barbara Porter, who as Associate Managing Editor has shepherded this book through its many stages of production.

I am indebted to the Humanities Council and to the University Committee on Research in the Humanities at Princeton University for their financial support of this project. Mention should also be made of Princeton’s Department of Spanish and Portuguese for its constant support of intellectual ventures in workshops and colloquia such as the one that has resulted in this volume.

In addition, all those who study the Persiles owe a debt of gratitude to Alban K. Forcione, the eminent Cervantist and Princetonian who began the modern rethinking of Persiles criticism with his landmark study, Cervantes, Aristotle, and the Persiles in 1970.

I thank Catherine Frost, copy editor at the University of Toronto Press, for her considerable contribution to this volume.

Finally, my thanks also to Sophia Núñez for the many hours of careful editorial assistance she provided while simultaneously finishing her own very promising dissertation.
