Many people have contributed to the research and writing of this book. I am deeply indebted to the foundations and institutions that so generously funded the extensive research phase in Italy and the writing phase as well: the Fiat Corporation, the Gladys Krieble Delmas Foundation, the Fulbright Commission, the University of Rhode Island, and the American Association of University Women. Without this financial support, I would never have been able to undertake or complete this project.

I would like to thank the Italian librarians and archivists who assisted me in my research, and I extend special thanks to the staff at the Biblioteca Nazionale Marciana di Venezia, the Museo Civico del Museo Correr, the Archivio di Stato di Venezia, the Biblioteca Civica della Bertoliana di Vicenza, the Archivio di Stato di Vicenza, the Biblioteca del Seminario di Padova, and the Archivio di Stato di Firenze.

I am indebted to Franco Fido, who first introduced me to Elisabetta Caminer Turra, and whose support over the course of a decade of research and writing has been immeasurably valuable. I extend deepest thanks to Mario Infelise, whose expert guidance and persistent prodding from across the Atlantic were fundamental in bringing this book to fruition. I cannot thank Angelo Colla enough for his generosity and creativity in exchanging ideas and information about Caminer with me. I am grateful for the guidance and intellectual companionship of Adriana Chemello, Antonia Arslan, and the Società delle Storiche Italiane. I cannot adequately express my gratitude to a special circle of colleagues and friends from the Veneto: Maria Teresa Sega and Guglielmo Fila, Maria Parrino and Mario Piccinini, Tiziana Plebani and Alberto Fiorin, Patrizia Bravetti and Piero Scarpa, Elena Bertagnolli, and Maria Magotti. Over the years, they have all given generously of their time, intelligence, hospitality, and sense of humor; as a group, they helped me make Venice my home, and they keep me connected while I am away. I am indebted to the women in my writing group at the University of Rhode Island for carefully reading my manuscript and offering invaluable suggestions for its improvement. I extend special thanks to Wendy Wassyng Roworth, Franca Barricelli, Andrea Rusnock, Rebecca Messbarger, Paola Giuli, and Paula Findlen, who have supported and inspired me in my work on Caminer.

I am indebted to those who lent their expertise to improve my translation of Caminer’s writing: Franco Fido for his help with some of the theatrical texts; Anthony Oldcorn for his assistance with the poetry; Maria Parrino and Mario Piccinini for their help with particularly obtuse passages; and especially Paschal Viglionese, who offered helpful suggestions for nearly every translation in the manuscript. I thank Erik Carlson for his meticulous editing and Randy Petilos for his help in bringing the manuscript to the publication stage. I am immeasurably indebted to Albert Rabil for his fine editorial eye, his wise counsel, and his unflagging encouragement. Heartfelt thanks go to my mother, Jane Isherwood Sama, for her help in the final stages of the book. Finally, I would like to express deep gratitude to my family and friends for their steadfast support and encouragement.
