Living as I do in an era of unanswered letters and unreturned telephone calls, I am deeply grateful to the many people who have assisted and encouraged me with this project. Joseph L. Arbena, Paolo Pierangeli, Hajo Bernett, Peter Donnelly, Henning Eichberg, Lars Magnus Engström, Javier Duran Gonzalez, John M. Hoberman, Wray Vamplew, and Leif Yttergren responded to specific requests for information. The staff of the Robert Frost Library performed their usual miracles and obtained books and articles from far and wide. Betty Steele and the staff of the Amherst College Computer Center saved me weeks if not months of tedious labor. The frustrations encountered in the search for visual materials were allayed by Gridth Ablon, Mieko Baba, Hajo Bernett, Richard Cashman, Carl Cone, Wolfgang Decker, Claude Erbson, Sally Fox, Maxwell Howell, Roland Renson, and Eric de Vroude. President Peter Pouncey recklessly assured me that I'd have at least one interested reader.

Portions of the manuscript were read critically by Howell Chickering, Wolfgang Decker, Frederick Griffiths, Rebecca Hague, Margaret Hunt, Donald Kyle, Roberta J. Park, Gertrud Pfister, Joachim Rühl, Thomas Scanlon, and Elizabeth Will. Cindy L. Himes, Richard Mandell, and Kate Wittenberg read the entire manuscript. All these readers made valuable suggestions and saved me from blunders.

For financial assistance, I wish to thank Deans Ralph Beals and Ronald Rosbottom.

For permission to use a number of paragraphs from chapter 10 of Acknowledgments

my previous book, A Whole New Ball Game, I thank the University of North Carolina Press.

I gladly obey the convention that saves the most important acknowledgment for the last: my greatest debt is to Doris Bargen.
Women’s Sports
A History