Acknowledgments

As a first-semester graduate student at Marquette University, I enrolled in Judson B. Allen's seminar "The Lyric Ego and Piers Plowman." I felt insufficiently prepared and considered withdrawing until he quelled my fears with an (appropriately solemn) exhortation to "consider the course a retreat." The first seeds of this book were planted at that time.

This book is a "book of love" in more ways than one. Although it has gone through multiple drafts, I have never wearied of it—partly because the subject matter engages me personally; partly because my first readers, Alger N. Doane, Sherry Reames, and Fannie LeMoine, never ceased to encourage me. To them I owe a tremendous, heartfelt debt of gratitude.

I also acknowledge gratefully the institutional support of the University of Wisconsin–Madison in the form of two successive fellowships during the spring of 1986 and the academic year 1986–87. The English Department there afforded me access to the Wang Computer Laboratory, and the staff kindly supported my efforts at word processing.

The debt of gratitude extends to dear friends, teachers, and colleagues—Martin Winkler, Donald Rowe, Carol Braun Pasternack, Barbara Fowler, Jerome Taylor, Valerie Lagorio, and Dolores Frese—whose moral support has sustained me through the progress of this work. My fellow medievalists at Purdue University, Charles Ross, Shaun F. D. Hughes, and Thomas Ohlgren, have eased the revision process with their good counsel, interest, and enthusiasm. Bernhard Kendler and the readers at Cornell University Press have given me invaluable advice and guided the work into print with generous and expert care.

In May 1987 I delivered an early version of Chapter 5 as a paper at the International Medieval Congress in Kalamazoo, Michigan. Much of Chapter 4 was given as a paper the following year at Kalamazoo and has been published subsequently in an article titled “Feminine Figurae in the Writings of Richard Rolle: A Register of Spiritual Development,” Mystics Quarterly 15.3 (1989): 283–99. I thank Valerie Lagorio for permission to republish it.

Caroline Walker Bynum has my gratitude for allowing me to see and cite the text of her plenary address, “Bodily Miracles and the Resurrection of the Body in the High Middle Ages,” given in Kalamazoo at the May 1988 International Medieval Congress. I am grateful, too, to E. Ann Matter, who kindly allowed me to read a prepublication copy of Chapter 6 of her book “The Voice of My Beloved”: The Song of Songs in Western Medieval Christianity, forthcoming from the University of Pennsylvania Press.

I owe inexpressible thanks to the Schoenstatt Sisters of Mary, with whom I lived, worked, and prayed during the time of research and writing. Their sisterly support has made everything possible. The affection of my parents, brothers, and sisters has been similarly warm, constant, and strengthening.

The final debt of love is to Fr. Joseph Kentenich, the founder of Schoenstatt, to whom I have dedicated this work. I did not meet him during his lifetime. His writings, however, have been my daily spiritual reading for the past fifteen years, and they have shaped my thinking, living, and loving in inestimable ways. I hold myself accountable for whatever errors and infelicities this book may contain; I honor him for whatever genuine wisdom it possesses.

Ann W. Astell

West Lafayette, Indiana