Acknowledgments

This book has benefited immeasurably from the counsel of several individuals. Two readers for Cornell University Press, David Loewenstein and Paul Morrison, were extremely helpful in their comments, criticism, and close attention to detail. For their wise judgments and their astute observations, I am indeed grateful. I also thank Bernhard Kendler and Kay Scheuer of Cornell University Press for their continuing support and encouragement. In addition to the Press’s readers, John T. Shawcross read the manuscript in its entirety and offered invaluable suggestions concerning matters both large and small.

Portions of the book were presented before several gatherings, including the Newberry Library Milton Seminar and the University of Central Florida First Biennial Conference on the Arts and Public Policy. These lively and memorable meetings proved immensely helpful to me in working out the thesis of my book and in fostering the development of the argument as a whole. Whether in the context of these meetings or in informal discussion, I have had the opportunity to benefit from the good offices of friends and colleagues whom I acknowledge here. These include Diana Treviño Benet, Robert Fallon, Stephen M. Fallon, Achsah Guibbory, Alan Hager, Albert C. Labriola, Helen Marlborough, Donald G. Marshall, Janel Mueller, Michael Murrin, Annabel Patterson, Mary Beth Rose, and Regina M. Schwartz.

Finally, I extend yet once more both my profound thanks and deep affection to my wife, Roslyn, with whom I have shared everything for nearly three decades. The book itself is dedicated to the memory of my parents.

Michael Lieb

Chicago, Illinois