CONTENTS

Preface ix
Acknowledgments xvii

PART I. The “Deadline Crisis” 1
1. Khrushchev’s Attack on Berlin and Bonn 3
   A Trial Balloon 10
   The Soviet Note of November 27, 1958 12
   Berlin as a Lever 17
   The Soviet Draft Peace Treaty 20
   The Changing Status Quo 23
   The Role of the DDR 25
2. Dulles’ Flexibility 29
   The Berlin Policy of Secretary Dulles 30
   Dulles’ Preference for Negotiations 40
   The Risks in Negotiation 45
   Acheson’s Alternative 49
   Dulles’ Travels 53
   Macmillan’s Initiative and the End of the “Deadline Crisis” 56
   The “Inflexibles” 63
   The Decision to Negotiate 68

PART II. Berlin Negotiations and the U-2 Incident 69
3. Geneva I: Negotiations under Duress 71
   The Diplomatic Game at Geneva: Quarrels within the Western Team 72
   The West Opens 77
   Gromyko on the Allied Wicket 82
   A Long Shot on a New Play 87
   The Soviets Take the Game 91
4. The Failure of Dulles’ Strategy 97
   Eisenhower’s Latent Interest in Summitry 97
   Khrushchev’s Vision of a Two-Power Settlement 98
   Third Power Intervention 105
CONTENTS

"Decline" of a Two-Power World 108
"Collapse" of a Two-Power World 111
Khrushchev's Behavior at Paris 122
The U-2 and Berlin 127
The Dénouement of Dulles' Strategy 128

PART III. Berlin Strategy, the Wall, and the Blockade of Cuba 135

5. Kennedy Inherits the Crisis 137
   The New Pressures on Khrushchev 138
   Khrushchev's Impatience 139
   Kennedy's Thoughts on Berlin 141
   The Vienna Conference 145
   Formulation of a Berlin Strategy 147
   European Reactions to the Strategy 154
   The Summer Crunch 158
   The First Strategic Test 166
   The Gamble that Paid Off 170

6. Geneva II: An Elusive Settlement 175
   Kennedy Strives to Avert War by Miscalculation 176
   "But Mr. President, the Soviets Will Misunderstand" 181
   Why Did Khrushchev Relent? 184
   "Exploratory Talks" and the Second Strategic Test 186
   The Second Geneva Conference 193
   Washington between Two Vetoes 198

7. Khrushchev's Final Bid: The Missile Crisis 207
   The Berlin Context of the Missile Crisis 208
   Cuba and the Military Balance 212
   The Third Strategic Test and the Cuba Strategy 215
   From Miscalculation to Calculation 222
   The Decisive Issue for Khrushchev 227

PART IV. The Crisis in Retrospect 231

8. The Political Costs of Berlin Negotiations 233
   Washington's Response to the Crisis 234
   Khrushchev's Miscalculation 237
   The Break with de Gaulle 240

Bibliography 243

Index 257